Allan,

A couple of suggestions for captions.

Tanaka complained of even the limited democracy in Japan. He bewailed the existence of a minority political party, and called for its end. Japan now has but one party. He even protested the legal necessity of placing important matters of policy before the cabinet on the grounds that Japan's plans would thus leak out.

He planned to force China off the silver standard and onto a gold standard based on Japan's monetary system, thus allowing Japanese financing via the printing press in occupied countries.

Born in Yamaguchi in 1863, son of sumurai of the Choshu Clan, member of military class, lesser nobility by birth. Army commission at 24, married blood relative of Yamagata, "father of the Japanese Army." Became premier 1925, served 2 yrs. died 1929. Took poison in the apartment of his favorite Geisha (this is officially denied, but evidently true).
